A) Рубрика [_____▼]

The bear is one of the biggest mammals of our planet. It can weigh from 350 to 700 kg and be up to 3 metres long. Body weight of bears varies throughout the year in bears of temperate and arctic climates, as they build up fat reserves in the summer and autumn and lose weight during the winter. Bears are generally bulky animals with short tails and limbs and thick bones.

B) Рубрика [_____▼]

Bears live in many parts of the world. The most widespread species is the brown bear, which lives from Western Europe eastwards through Asia to the western areas of North America. The American black bear is restricted to North America, and the polar bear is restricted to the Arctic Sea. All the remaining species of bear are Asian and live in forests and rainforests as well as steppes and grassland.

C) Рубрика [_____▼]

Brown and American black bears are generally active for the most part during the day. Other species may be active at night, except for mothers with cubs because cubs need to be given food. Mothers with cubs are the only group of bears you can come across. As a rule, bears prefer loneliness. They can gather in groups during the fishing season but they always hunt alone.

D) Рубрика [_____▼]

Most bears eat anything though they generally prefer plants to animals except for the polar bear which has no vegetation to eat. They eat anything from leaves, roots and berries to insects, fresh meat and fish. They have digestive systems and teeth adapted to all these foods. All bears feed on any food source that becomes seasonally available or which it can find on its territory.

E) Рубрика [_____▼]

Bears produce a number of sounds. They click their tongues to show good mood. It is especially common between mothers and their cubs. A stressed bear may moan, groan and huff. Barking is produced during times of alarm or excitement. Warning sounds include jaw-clicking and lip-popping, while teeth-chatters, bellows, growls, roars and pulsing sounds are made in aggressive encounters.

There is nothing more British than fish and chips. This is a very tasty dish if it's freshly cooked. You can eat it both at home and outdoors.

Here are some facts about how fish and chips came about. London claims to be the inventor of this famous meal. It happened in the 17th century. At that time chips were a cheap kind of food. The British had plenty of fish so they put fish and chips together. The combination was so tasty that people liked it immediately. This way the new national dish was born. It used to be sold at markets and then the first fish and chips shops appeared. Originally these were small family businesses. Now there are big chain stores of fish and chips. If you ever come to England, you simply must try this really tasty dish.
